IPC Targets on Czechoslovakia

1. Among the European Satellites, Czechoslovakia is the second largest producer of electronic equipment, ranking only below East Germany. Czechoslovakia is estimated to be nearly self-sufficient in supplying its requirements for electronic end items. Some electronic components, however, are imported, principally from other Bloc countries. Radar of native design is produced for domestic civil and military use, and telecommunications equipment, military and civil, is exported to Bloc and non-Bloc countries. Czechoslovakia is noted, for example, as the principal supplier of high-power transmitters among the countries of the Soviet Bloc. Although the Czechoslovak electronic industry has not been growing as rapidly as the electronic industries of most other Bloc countries, it is well developed and capable of producing modern, high-quality, electronic equipment in quantities sufficient to satisfy a significant proportion of future Bloc electronic requirements.

2. The following manufacturing facilities for electronic equipment are estimated to have the highest intelligence priority. Ranked in order of priority they are:
